

Children in North London, taking part in Unicef's Child Friendly Cities and Communities programme.

ENGAGING LOCAL MEDIA

An effective way of speaking out in support of children's rights is to tell your local newspaper or radio station what you're doing for OutRight 2020/21.

These media outlets can help to spread the word in your local community and galvanise support. For example, your MP might read about OutRight in the local newspaper and contact the relevant Government Minister as a result.

GUIDANCE

Perhaps you have some aspiring journalists or radio presenters at your school/organisation? To speak out to your community about your plans for OutRight this year, call the local newspaper and invite them to take a photo of your school/organisation and the work you're doing. Or call your local radio station to see if children and young people could go on air to talk about OutRight, children's rights and climate change.

If you or the children and young people you work with are not sure how to contact local media in your area, please email outright@unicef.org.uk and we will be more than happy to help.

Here are some tips:

- Be prepared for a quick phone call. Sometimes people who work in the media can be very busy, so it's a good idea to write down what you want to say to keep in front of you when you call.
- Always follow up with an email, re-capping the main points from your phone conversation.
- Don't leave it too late. The sooner you can get in touch the better, as they are more likely to have a space for you.
- Be enthusiastic! The person you are calling should want to find out lots more about your involvement in OutRight 2020/21 and why you're raising your voices on climate change and children's rights.

You can find more tips on engaging local media here:

unicef.uk/YouthAdvocacyToolkit

If your school or organisation is featured in your local media, please let us know! Send us a clipping, link or recording if you can to outright@unicef.org.uk or tag us in a social media post you feature in.